

SHINE BRIGHT

AVOIDING CLOSING DELAYS: 5 OF THE BEST STRATEGIES

MCMANAMY
MCLEOD
HELLER

There is nothing more exasperating for the parties to a real estate transaction than an unexpected closing delay. The buyer wants to move in, the seller wants to move on – and the real estate agent wants a commission check.

Even with the best planning, no one can completely eliminate the possibility of glitches occurring along the way. But there are five steps any agent can take to minimize the changes of a glitch or its impact if one occurs:

1. SET A REASONABLE CLOSING DATE

You can always close 'early' if everything proceeds without a hitch. But adding a few days to the desired closing date can do much to alleviate frustration. A rule of thumb under normal circumstances might be 45 days to close, but this could vary from state to state.

2. SUBMIT HOA CLEARANCE LETTERS EARLY

TRID (the updated federal regulation in effect since October 2015) requires lenders to give borrowers an accurate accounting of the transaction, including HOA fees and costs, at the start of the loan process. So if the home in question has a homeowner's association, a copy of the HOA clearance letter should be submitted to the lender as soon as possible.

3. URGE HOMEBUYERS TO REVIEW QUICKLY

TRID requires lenders to provide the Closing Disclosure to the buyer early but a three-day receipt period followed by a three-day review period can result in as much as a six-day delay. Urge your homebuyers to review the forms on the very first day they receive them.

4. DISCUSS ANY ISSUES RIGHT AWAY

Waiting to raise a concern, or assuming it will be addressed at the closing table, can almost always ensure a delay. Both buyer and seller should be alerted to immediately report anything confusing or inaccurate in the forms to their agent and title company.

5. QUICKLY CONFRONT WALK-THROUGH ISSUES

Since walk-throughs are typically held a few days before closing, agents should encourage their buyers to confront any possible issues right away. Small things, like a leaky faucet, can be quickly resolved. But anything that affects the payment or the interest rate can require new forms and a new review period.

McManamy McLeod Heller
3520 Piedmont Road NE
Ste. 110
404-442-6600
info@mmhfirm.com
www.mmhfirm.com

HELPING YOU SHINE BRIGHT